Green Hotel Lawyer: Green Hotel economics 202 A at work in practice. Can anyone still say that Green and Luxury are incompatible?

25 April 2009

Hotel Lawyers with success stories on GREEN hotels. The hotel lawyers in JMBM’s Global Hospitality Group® are big believers in “green” hotels. Many industry friends continue asking for the DVDs and great presentation materials from last year’s Hotel Developers Conference on green hotel development. Most of these resources are available on www.HotelLawBlog.com under the “TOPIC” of Green Hotels. The events I am reporting on today build on the base of that knowledge and experience, and thus lead us to “Green Hotel economics 202.”

As many of you know, we believe that green building is the ECONOMICALLY prudent way to go. That is the entire thesis of my Cornell Hospitality Quarterly article entitled "The Compelling Hard Case for Green Hotel Development."

Still, I was pleasantly surprised when two new items ended up on my desk this week. They are both further demonstration confirming the hard economic value of green development. The first item was the LEED Gold certification awarded to one of my favorite luxury hotels, Montage Beverly Hills under the direction of my friend, Ali Kasikci. The second was a new study published by two professors documenting a very strong economic premium in both rental and value (sales price) for green buildings based upon data from 553 green projects. The numbers may even amaze you (more than a 31% value premium). But that is a story for the next blog . . .

Montage Beverly Hills awarded LEED Gold certification

Awarding of LEED Gold to Montage Beverly Hill and residences should forever silence the skeptics who argued that green hotel development and sustainable operations are incompatible with luxury — much less ultra-luxury — hotels and hotel mixed-use.
Montage Beverly Hills became the first ultra-luxury LEED Gold hotel, and one of only four LEED Gold hotels (of any standard) in the world. Montage Beverly Hills is also the first newly constructed mixed-use hotel and residential project to be LEED certified as a single development, denoting it as a high performance building that is a responsible, efficient and healthy place to live and work.

“We’re gratified to have created and be operating Southern California’s first hotel and residential project to obtain Gold level certification,” said Alan J. Fuerstman, Founder and CEO of Montage Hotels & Resorts.

“It’s a fitting tribute to our development team, our construction team, the City of Beverly Hills and the ongoing efforts of the entire Montage Beverly Hills staff that luxury and sustainability can be synonymous,” he said.

Ali Kasikci is a dear friend, and one of the greatest hoteliers in the world. Click here to read more about Ali Kasikci and Montage Beverly Hill’s success story. And it was really personally satisfying to see the press release this week that Montage Beverly Hills was officially awarded LEED Gold certification!
property, Ali Kasikci? As the first luxury hotel built in Beverly Hills in more than 16 years, it has created quite a stir and become a new "home" for many travelers, locals and residents.

There are a lot of feathers in a lot of caps that are well deserved from this accomplishment:

- Alan J. Fuerstman, CEO of Montage Hotels & Resorts
- Kim Richards, President of The Athens Group, together with Jay Newman who was project manager for the hotel developer
- The mayor and City of Beverly Hills in this landmark success story of a public-private partnership
- HKS Hill Glazier, architects for the project

“All future projects are being designed and constructed with the sustainable commitment that Montage has towards the environment and surrounding communities. We will continue to lean on the USGBC and the LEED rating system in order to benchmark our success,” said Mark Slymen, Director of Sustainability for Montage Hotels & Resorts and a LEED Accredited Professional who oversaw adoption of required LEED elements in conjunction with Green Dinosaur, a green building consulting firm.
